NATION'S LARGEST LAW FIRMS CONTINUE TO GROW

According to the National Law Journal's ninth annual survey of the nation's largest law firms, the growth of the nation's 250 largest law firms showed no sign of leveling off this year. The first 800-lawyer firm (Baker & McKenzie) emerged and the long-established benchmark of "biggest"--the 100-attorney firm--has become the minimum requirement. Other highlights of the survey show that the average firm in the 250 grew from 173 to 194 lawyers--an average increase of 12.1 percent; eleven firms now have more than 400 lawyers, and more than one quarter of all lawyers working for the largest 250 firms are now stationed in branches. And, not surprisingly, starting salaries for associates have soared as the impact of New York City pay hikes have spread across the country.
